This corporation figured conspicuously lately in the investigation of the bids for the printing of the Patent Office Gazette. Dunn states that the National Lithographic Company was organized on June 13, 1893, the capital stock was fixed of $20,000, divided into 200 shares of the par value of $100 each, and that the trustees for the first year were George W. Dunn, Horace Kenney, and Wil-liam C. Cooke.

The company bought out the Bell Litho-graphic Company and assumed the obliga-tions of that company. It was agreed to pay one-half of the indebtedness of the Bell Company on or before July 1, 1894.

The premises of the Bell Lithographic Company, Nos. 461 and 463 C street, were leased and it was stipulated that before the expiration of the lease the National Lithographic ompany should agree to purchase the Bell Lithographic Company's property for $7,000.
This it has failed to do, and an action at law has been entered for $10,000 against it by the Bell Company.

It was agreed that Geo. W. Dunn was to receive one-third and Horace Kenney two-thirds of the profits of the National Lithographic

Company,
George W. Dunn alleges that Kenney claims to be the only stockholder, has assumed the management of the corporation, and has not paid the indebte iness of copartnership, and he asks that Kenney be perpetually enjoined from interfering with the management and control of the affairs of the company.

READING FOR THE PEOPLE

Public Library Bill Formally Reported by the House District Committee.

TO BE IN THE NEW POST OFFICE

Thirty-five Thousand Books Already Available and More Likely to Be Added by Voluntary Contribution-Its Volumes Will Be Circulated Among 100,000 People in the City.

Washington should have a free public circulating library. That is the essence of the favorable report in Mr. Heard's bill, as made to $2.50, worth double the by Mr. Cadmus of the House District Comittee vesterday.

> After citing the fact that the national capital is rich in reference libraries, there being over one million volumes in the Congressionat departmental and other local libraries, a greater number of books per capita than is to be found in any other city in the United States, the report says:

The Congressional library is practically out of reach of the mass of the people, owing to the hours of opening and closing and the conditions placed upon the enjoyment of its privileges. The departmental libraries are accessible only to a few employes of the government, and closed to them early in the afternoon. There are 52 libraries in the District, each containing over 1,000 volumes, and not one of them is a free library, with a reading-room open at night for the benefit of the general public. All of these literary treasures are inaccessible to the common people. So far as they are concerned, these million books would be as useful if transported to and located upon the face of the moon.

The purpose of the bill as reported is then stated to be to give the benefit to the people. of the capital that are now enjoyed by resi-dents of smaller towns. The Librarian of dents of smaller towns. The Librarian of Congress has reported that there are some 15,000 duplicate volumes in the Congressional Library which could easily be spared from that collection for the purpose suggested. Out of 300,000 volumes in the department libraries, some 20,000 in all: 10,000 in the Interior Department, 5,080 in the War Department, and 5,000 in the Treasury Department, are circulating books and not technical works of reference necessary for official purposes, and could therefore be added to the 15,000 from the Congressional Library. There are also assurances, continues the report, of con-tributions of money and books from citizens. Concerning the details of the librar; it is suggested in the report that about 6,000 square feet of floor space will be necessary for book-room, reading room and administrative pur-

It is suggested therefore that this amount of At is suggested therefore to at this amount of space be reserved out of the 340,000 square feet of space in the eight floors of the new City Post Office building, now in course of construction on Pennsylvania avenue and between Eleventh and Twelfth streets. The admistrative expenses of the library, it is suggested, should be not in the same manner as other municipal expenses in pursuance of estimates submitted by the District Commissioners. The report than declared that the portion of the population making reasonable demand for the facilities to be offered by such a circulor the includes to be obtained by such a circulating library are twenty thousand government employes. Sixty-three thousand school children, thirty-three thousand of whom are over 12 years of age and adults engaged in lines of work classified in the census of 1890. and manufacturers, together with their

The report then states that if the library were proposed as a general departmental col-lection solely for government employes, its creation would be justifiable on economical tional purposes, 80,000,000 for public schools, 1,500,000 for state universities, nearly 10,000, 000 for agricultural colleges, not a foot of land has ever been donated to the District for educational purposes. Therefore this library of the District is simple justice. The report concludes as follows:

concludes as follows:

"It is believed to be wise for Congress to place the Capital City, with its quarter million of people, in respect to whom it exercises the exclusive power of legislation, at least upon an equal footing in free library facilities with other intelligent and progressive ties with other intelligent and progressive municipalities."

The bill provides for accommodations suitable for 75,000 volumes, with reading rooms, directs that such books as can be turned over from the Congressional and departmental libraries be used as the nucleus of the collection, and provides that the library shall be open from 2 o'clock a. m. to 10 o'clock p. m. daily, except Sundays and holidays, on which days it shall be kept open from 3 to 10 p. m. only. The expenses are to be met in the same manner as other municipal expenses.

Gladys—Pooh! The flance is forgotton these times. To notice him would be too back number for anything. Good-bye, Reggy. I must dress for the Cesino bail now. You are looking delightfully gloomy—for all the world like some royal noble married off to please the diplomats, and, too, to the one woman of all the world he hates. That's right; that's modern and distinguished. Cultivate it still more if you can. Good-bye!

Reggy (taking the outstretched hand as a drowning mar. would grasp a straw, his heart beating fast with amorous worship)—Gladys!

For God's sake, what's the meaning of all this demnation rot? It's driving me insane. I can't stand it; so help me heaven, I can't. Gladys, tell me that you love me—just once—please, please—

Gladys—There! There! Don't be stupid. Let go my hand! I've promised to marry you, haven't I?

Reggy (seized with a horrible misgiving)—Gladys, you love another!

Gladys (shrinking scornfully)—Shocking. I consider that an insult. I assure you that if I ever do commit such a folly with act one it will be only with my husband. (Chillingiy.) Good day, Mr. Van Giesen!

Good day, Mr. Van Giesen!

(Poor Van Giesen watches the beautiful wonder worshipfully as she disappears down the avenue of trees, then goes off to the club, sits down in one corner, his back to a rollicking poker party, and orders four fingers of brandy in soda.—New York World.

W. A. WOODS, Proprietor.

Reggy (wickedly)—Thanks!
Gladys—You may kiss me—once, on my forchead, if you'll promise not to disarrange my hair. (Reggy responds coldly, kissing her as one hypnotized.) Do you love me now, Reggy?

Reggy (with emotion)—I did once.
Gladys—That's infinitely better. I'll forgive you that once; but please don't let it happen again—that is, the expression of it. And the ring?

Reggy—Here it is. (He slips it perfunctorily upon her finger.)
Gladys—Thank you, Reggy. • • Bless me! Here comes the De Paysters, the Jacklyns, and the Van Rensselaers. Please don't sit so close. They will certainly accuse us of flirting, and that's so vulgar, you know.

Reggy (injuredly)—Accuse us of flirting. What do you call it, pray?

Gladys—Oh—er—merely coming to an understanding, that's all. Good afternoon, ladies! (Brushes a fly with the hand from which the magnificent jewel shines and finshes out the tidings, whereupon the whole bevy of women pounce down upon the bride-to-be with congratulations smothered in kisses. Ten minutes of effusive demonstrations, during which Reggy, quite ignored and forgotten, separates himself from the group.
Gladys (joining her fiance apart)—Beg pardon, Reggy. Those were woman's privileges.

Reggy (sconfully)—Those kisses and hugs, ch? Too bad they aren't a flance's.
